

Watch: Incredible timelapse shows SoFi Stadium construction from start to finish

The Rams have only played three games at SoFi Stadium so far this season, all of which have been without fans in attendance. They're back at home on Sunday for their first meeting with the Seahawks, a game that comes with first place in the NFC West on the line.

The Rams' new home was nearly four years in the making, after the completion date was pushed back a year due to heavy rainfall early in the process. It was worth the wait, however, even if fans have been unable to experience its glory.

Take a look at the incredible timelapse video below, which spans more than three years and took over four million photos to complete.

The surrounding area near SoFi Stadium still isn't complete, with the NFL's headquarters also being under construction, as are other parts of Hollywood Park. The stadium itself is done, and it's as spectacular as expected.

It'll be home to the Rams and Chargers for a long, long time, and also play host to events such as the Super Bowl and possibly World Cup matches.
