

Watch live: Women's World Cup ticker-tape parade streams

By Meghan Giannotta • July 10, 2019

The U.S. Women's National Team are the 2019 World Cup champions, and New Yorkers ready to celebrate.

The city is honoring the team's fourth Women's World Cup victory with a ticker-tape parade along Canyon of Heroes. It stretches Broadwa, from the Battery to City Hall and stepped off at 9:30 a.m. Mayor Bill de Blasio is set to present the team with keys to the city during a ceremony at 10:30 a.m. at City Hall Plaza.

Tickets were made available to the public, but sold out fast. If you weren't one of the lucky ones — or you can't make it downtown on a weekday morning — consider tuning into a livestream of the parade instead.

Viewers in the city and surrounding areas can watch the parade on TV on CBS, with coverage set from 9:30 a.m. to noon. The special, airing live, is dubbed "Saluting the Champions."

It's also available for streaming on your computer or iPhone, through the CBS Live app and CBS.com/watch.

NBC 4 New York is also offering full coverage of the event, with a livestream at NBCNewYork.com/Live.

ABC's coverage is available for streaming online at ABCNews.com/live, the ABC News mobile app, as well as on Roku, Hulu, Apple TV and Amazon Fire devices.

A free option for those who don't have cable: EarthCam has cameras positioned along Broadway so you can stream the start of the parade. A full livestream is also expected on the NYC Mayor's Office YouTube page.
