

Take a peek at the famed Abbey Road crossing with the New webcam - sound and video added July 14, 2010

For a few years now, Abbey Road Studios in London has had a webcam on its website directed at the famed crossing used on the Beatles' iconic "Abbey Road" album with stop-motion video and no sound where you could see what goes on there every day, including the many tourist groups that visit.

The webcam has now been upgraded with full video and sound. You can now hear and see everything going on much better than before.

The angle of the webcam is about the exact opposite of the album cover, so you don't get the same view of the street. But you can see the wall on the right-hand side from the back of the cover. And you can watch tourists try and dodge the traffic as they make their way across that very busy street, some trying to duplicate the Beatles' album cover.

You can find the webcam at <http://www.abbeyroad.com/visit/>.

The view from the new Abbey Road webcam without the sound