

The Legendary Zebra Stripes August 2, 2010

The Beatles crossed 1969 for a record cover to Abbey Road in London. A live webcam shows, as do the same every day countless tourists.

The best pop band of all time took up 90 percent of their albums at Abbey Road Studios in London. Even the remasters were released last year handled.

In April 1969, the band recorded in the studio, their last album, "Abbey Road". For the cover of the Beatles' best-selling work of the Fab Four crossed the pedestrian crossing next to the studio. A photo for eternity, which later led the Red Hot Chili Peppers to a somewhat provocative interpretation.

The studios and of course above all the zebra stripes are now a destination for many fans, who have a photo on the street.
