

This One-Minute SFMOMA Construction Time-Lapse Video Is Awesome

Watch the acclaimed Snøhetta-designed expansion go up in mere seconds.

by Brock Keeling May 6, 2016, 10:00a

Watch the new SFMOMA expansion construction, from start to finish, in this time-lapse video from EarthCam. It shows that the entire project is an impressive feat considering it arose on such a seemingly awkward piece of land, sandwiched between two existing structures.

Behold:

Amazing. Certainly a clearer, fuller video compared to the six-second snippet released last year.

While the SFMOMA expansion, comprehensively covered here at Curbed SF, is a sight to behold — as well as a major impact on both the Yerba Buena neighborhood and the international art world at large — one sometimes forgets that it only takes up a deceptively small slice of a block on Howard and Third.

The San Francisco Museum of Modern Art reopen to the public on May 14.

[SFMOMA Construction Time-Lapse \[EarthCam/YouTube\]](#)

[The Snøhetta-Designed SFMOMA Expansion \[Curbed SF\]](#)

[10 Things Not to Miss at the New SFMOMA \[Curbed SF\]](#)

[New Snøhetta-Designed SFMOMA Expansion is an Astounding, Playful Success \[Curbed SF\]](#)

[Watch Two Years of the New SFMOMA Rising in Just 6 Seconds \[Curbed SF\]](#)