

Ultra Music Festival by EarthCam: Watch Giving ravers a bird's-eye view all weekend long...

John Ochoa

Sunday, March 25, 2018 - 10:58

Ultra Music Festival is streaming live all weekend long. Now you can watch the festival with a view from the sky thanks to EarthCam.

EarthCam, a webcam content, technology and services company that owns and operates a global network of live-streaming webcams, is giving ravers a bird's-eye view of Ultra via its camera directly overlooking Bayfront Park in Downtown Miami, where the festival takes place this weekend.

There's no sound available through the camera, but the view high up in the sky is quite nice. Once the sun goes down, the neon lights should add some extra colour to your screen as well. You can synch the EarthCam to the various livestreams happening all weekend for some extra audiovisual fun. The camera looks to be overlooking the Ultra Mainstage, which welcomes Armin van Buuren, DJ Snake, Tiësto, David Guetta and tons more starting today through Sunday.

For more Ultra livestream action, check out the best streams to watch today. DJ Mag, in association with global online streaming platform BE-AT.TV, is also exclusively streaming live sets from house and techno heavy hitters Carl Cox and Stephan Bodzin today and tomorrow on our Facebook page.

Head to the EarthCam website to watch Ultra Music Festival from the sky.

Via Magnetic Magazine

John Ochoa is the editor-at-large of DJ Mag North America. You can find him living his best life on Twitter.