

If You Have Two Minutes You Can Watch The Three Years It Took to Build UTSW's Clements Hospital

Hospitals 06/16/2016| by Matt Goodman

UT Southwestern's William P. Clements Jr. University Hospital has been open in Dallas' Medical District for about a year and a half. And EarthCam, a webcam company that's documented the construction of the 9/11 Memorial Museum as well as the Atlanta Falcon's Mercedes-Benz Stadium and the Barclay Center, has posted a two-minute time lapse of the roughly three years it took to build it.

The hospital, funded in part by a $100 million gift by the late Texas governor it shares a name with, moved 200 patients over on December 6, 2014. It's been open since. You can watch the video below: