Looking for the perfect way to spend New Year's Eve? You can party from this afternoon until tomorrow afternoon with EarthCam's live coverage. The company's 19th annual New Year's Eve webcast begins in Sydney, Australia on December 31, at midnight local time – 4 pm in Saudi Arabia. It climaxes in Times Square, NY, USA before wrapping up in Hawaii.

Viewers will become immersed in the excitement of the new year by watching a fireworks display, live from Bangkok, Thailand. Count down from “zehn” to “eins” in Hamburg, Germany; observe a splendid light show at the Eiffel Tower; sing along at Cat's Meow Karaoke in New Orleans; and witness a life-changing moment as couples say their “I Do's” at The Viva Las Vegas Wedding Chapel – all from a computer or mobile device.

For the ultimate New Year's Eve experience, travel virtually to Times Square, and grab a front-row seat for the famous Ball Drop. Viewers will be able to see, hear and feel the anticipation build as midnight gets closer and closer with EarthCam's live streaming video and audio webcams located throughout the venue. In addition, EarthCam's time-lapse cameras will be snapping 16 megapixel, high quality photographs that can be shared on Facebook, Twitter and Instagram.

“This year's webcast is also available as a continuous switched feed on our new 24-hour channel, EarthCamTV.com,” said Brian Cury, CEO and Founder of EarthCam. “Any Internet-enabled television can easily display the streaming video, making it a fun addition at any New Year's Eve party.”

EarthCam's New Year's 2015 coverage offers over 50 live views of the worldwide celebration, including iconic locations in Brazil, the Czech Republic, Dubai, England, France, Germany, Ireland, Malta, The Netherlands, Philippines, Romania and Thailand. Archives from the cameras will be available a few hours later, so there's no need to worry about missing a location.
