The Andy Warhol Museum is launching a live video feed from the pop artist's gravesite to honour his 85th birthday.

The project, a partnership with the EarthCam webcam network, went live yesterday at midday (Hong Kong time), the museum said.

We believe that this will give Warhol the pleasure of knowing that he is still plugged in and turned on over 25 years after his death

Warhol museum director Eric Shiner said the project was entitled "Figment" because of a Warhol quote in which the artist said, "I always thought I'd like my own tombstone to be blank. No epitaph and no name. Well, actually, I'd like it to say, 'Figment'." The Pittsburgh gravestone has Warhol's original surname, Warhola, his birth and death dates and a cross. Warhol's 85th birthday would have been yesterday.

Shiner said the museum, which is based in Pittsburgh, Warhol's hometown, decided that the gravesite webcam "would be a really fantastic way to put Andy on the air 24/7 and plug in to our global audience".

"We believe that this will give Warhol the pleasure of knowing that he is still plugged in and turned on over 25 years after his death," Shiner said.

Warhol, who died in 1987, was a devout Catholic who went to church every day to pray, Shiner said, and he was buried near his parents at the St John the Baptist Byzantine Catholic Cemetery in the Pittsburgh suburbs.

The Warhol gravesite is also documented in artist Madelyn Roehrig's ongoing art project "Figments: Conversations with Andy". Roehrig videotapes people who visit the grave and photographs the many objects adoring fans leave there.

Hundreds of fans visit Warhol's grave every year, leaving items featured in his artworks, such as Campbell's Soup cans and Coca-Cola bottles.

EarthCam said it would also have a live webcam from the church where Warhol was baptised and people would be able to send flowers and watch as they were delivered to the grave.
