

EarthCam sets up Spring Break Cameras

By Jess March 7, 2016 7:32 AM

It's been a few years since I had to worry about what I would be doing on Spring Break. I did go on one Spring Break trip my senior year of college. I went on a cruise because it was the cheapest option and I was a broke college student.

I don't know how, but most kids head to Miami or Cancun for their Spring Break trip, where they're getting the money for that I have no idea. But they're out there and partying and I'm sure worrying their parents to no end. Well parents, have no fear. EarthCam is here to settle your nerves.

EarthCam.Com is providing parents with special "Spring Break Cams" to keep an eye out for their children while on Spring Break. Cameras are supposedly set up in Myrtle Beach, South Padre Island, Cancun, Jamaica, South Beach, Waikiki, Vegas, Mexico, Daytona Beach and Puerto Rico.

Obviously, it's a bit early for any Spring Breakers to be partying, but that's just an example of the shots EarthCam is getting.

I think that might be a little bit of a privacy issue and makes me feel a little uncomfortable. Would you want to watch your kids on Spring Break? It could also be argued, with the world we live in now, that you're just making sure they're making good decisions and in a safe environment. But still, it's a little weird. Let us know over on Facebook.

