The Atlanta Falcons open Mercedes-Benz Stadium with a regular season game Sunday night. And it's a repeat of the NFC Championship Game as the Falcons once again host the Green Bay Packers.

But before heading down to the new stadium for the game, don't miss this amazing video of it being built.

EarthCam released the latest time-lapse movie. The hand-edited movie showcases 39-months of progress in stunning 4K video. Viewers can see the entire construction process from groundbreaking to opening day in less than two minutes.

EarthCam construction cameras were onsite since June 2014, capturing 900 megapixel panoramas every day. The powerful combination of live streaming video and time-lapse webcams captured each critical milestone, including the installation of the structural steel necessary to support the "halo" video board and aperture-style retractable roof to the all-important opening day.
