

Spared from the Blizzard's Path? Watch the Misery Mount Live via Webcam

By Stephanie Myers | January 26, 2015

Last Updated By Becky Duncan, our reviewer, on February 3, 2015.

As a massive blizzard bombs the Northeast, wreaking havoc on travel, closing schools and businesses, and piling up to 3 feet of snow on the region, those in other parts of the country are counting their blessings to be out of its path. But that doesn't mean one has to miss out on watching it all play out.

In fact, anyone can watch the misery mount live in New York's Times Square and elsewhere the blizzard is packing a punch via live webcam from Earthcam.

See the snow piling up live in Times Square.

Already, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Connecticut have declared states of emergency. Millions of residents have been warned to stay home and avoid travel.

The storm is expected to worsen overnight as it moves northward. Massachusetts will impose driving bans based on predictions of historic snowfall.

The city of Boston will be hit hard by the blizzard, and its narrow streets will make getting around all the more difficult for residents. The rest of the country, though, can watch the wonders of winter weather exert its will on the city.

See Boston as the blizzard makes its mark.

Here is the view from the University of Delaware as it becomes increasingly obscured by snow.

The picturesque coastal Maine fishing town of Boothbay Harbor will be seeing wild weather, watch it live and feel toasty and warm.

Earthcam is a marvel no matter the time of year or current weather in a region. But in the middle of a blizzard the views are almost irresistible.

If the blizzard has spared your area, you can still watch it play out live via webcam.